

A Chinese peasant Yang Degui has been showing off his unique abilities for a number of years: grabbing money and treasure from an empty bowl!

On 17th October 2010, Yang was invited to a hotel room in Wuhan province by media organizations, to perform his famous act.

On the table, was placed a bowl half full of water. A local resident volunteered to put his hand in the water inside the bowl; in front of the media camera and many locals watchful eyes, Yang pulled out a red string from his pocket, hung it on the window frame, closed the curtain, and half closed his eyes while mumbling some words... about 50 seconds later, the local resident pulled 200 yuan from the bowl.

Next, a journalist tried: put his hand in the water, Yang mumbled a few words and also put his own hand in the bowl and patted the journalist hand while asking him to keep grabbing, about 72 seconds later, the journalist felt some paper pushed into his hand, he grabbed them, it was 200 yuan.

Many observers joined the queue to experience the act. In less than 50 minutes, 30 thousand yuan was "grabbed" from the empty bowl by different volunteers, among the money, were euros, American money and coins.

Reporters also visited Yang's home, a remote village, called Yaoziyan, seeing many Chinese paintings and calligraphy hanging on the walls, some by well-known Chinese artists. Yang explains that they were given by those people who had seen his performance, "but as a matter of fact, I did not even graduate from primary school, and I can not understand what is written on the calligraphy. I can only write my own name."

Yang says, he has performed many times, and he even once took all his clothes off when there were no females present, to show that he wasn't hiding the money on himself.

Yang also explained that things taken out from the empty bowl were not always money, there was once a bottle of white wine, and an ancient bronze ornament, etc. this is not up him to decide what he may get.

Pot Of Gold - But Not To Keep
