A Chinese scientist, Mr. Zhang Deliang has successfully predicted many earthquakes inside and outside China, including the May 12th 2008 Sichuan earthquake. But his reports were purposefully ignored by the Chinese communist government.

A researcher, Mr. Pan Zhengquan of Sichuan Deyang earthquake prevention department had also successfully predicted and reported the Sichuan earthquake months before, but had been ignored. After the Sichuan earthquake, Mr. Pan was forced to take early retirement.

On January 24th 2008, and March 24th 2008, Mr. Zhang and a local government leader had written two letters to the earthquake center of China, to inform them that there was likely to be an earth quake of magnitude 8.4 on May 12th, in Wenchuan area, Sichuan province.

Zhang had also sent a report predicting the Yushu earthquake to Beijing earthquake center on 6th March, and to the government of Tibet on 5th March, but both reports were ignored.

After the Sichuan earth quake, the Chinese communist regime decreed that no individual would be allowed to publish reports about earthquakes.
