

China's Guizhou province is the poorest area in China, with many villages still receiving a special government allowance. In the past couple of decades, much of the allowance funds have been "hijacked" by top officials, and cases of people going to Beijing seeking justice happen everyday.

Chinese communist party cadres are famously wealthy, and the leaders in Guizhou province are not lagging behind.

On June 16th this year, Chinese leader, Xi Jinping, visited Guizhou and surrounding areas. Xi asked to visit 4 or 5 local leaders homes. It was not on his planned schedule. Xi commented after staying about 10 minutes in each house: "These houses are not any worse than those of the ministers of European countries."

After this visit, the communist party leader of Guizhou, Zhou Benshun was held for investigation, and Zhao Kezhi replaced him.

In fact, Chinese communist leaders not only have extra houses in China, most of them have luxurious houses in oversea countries, like America, Canada, Australia, and England. Many of them have been quickly selling their houses in China secretly, and even below market value to move assets out of the country.

After Xi Jinping started his anti-corruption campaign following the dramatic arrest of Bo Xilai in 2012, hundreds of thousands of Chinese communist cadres and their relatives and close friends have rushed to buy houses overseas for cash.

On top right is the Guizhou government building.

The following 3 photos are Guizhou public schools. (screenshot from Chinese blogs)

团结小学
The above is called the "United Primary School"

高兴小学（不通车、不通电、还只有一个老师）

China has many schools with no electricity and no transport.

典型的茅草屋。

Typical local houses according to journalist.

Local home owners are valued less than 100 yuan is the only valuable belonging of the

这些孩子除了最小的一个以外，其他的全部都读书了。孩子是希望，是未来，愚昧，摆脱贫困。

此玉魏相关图片如下：

去的路上遇到了两个可爱的小家伙，正帮着个大大的背篓帮家里人做事呢。

sal (æ r e i v) primary school, except one under age. Some already work to